RESEARCH PROFILE

I am an interdisciplinary humanities researcher specializing in graphic narratives, multimodal discourse analysis, visual rhetoric, and postcolonial visual culture. My research examines how visual storytelling constructs identity, memory, trauma, marginalization, and epistemic justice across literary and digital environments.

My recent work extends into AI-assisted reading practices, digital humanities, multimodal literacy, and innovative approaches to higher education pedagogy. I am particularly interested in the evolving relationship between literature, visual communication, technology, and knowledge production.
